Disability Tax Credit

What is the Disability Tax Credit?

The Disability Tax Credit is a qualification used by the Canada Revenue Agency to determine eligibility for certain tax credits and benefits. CDTCA helps disabled Canadians apply for these tax credits and benefits.

How long does the process take?

The process generally takes around 6 months, but may take longer if we have to wait to receive the necessary forms back from you or your doctor. Canada Revenue Agency may also lengthen the process because they require more information from your doctor or other reasons.

Do I need to wait until personal tax season?

No, helping Canadians receive retroactive tax refunds for their disabilities can be done at any time of the year.

How much does this service cost?

We do not charge any upfront fees. If you receive a refund we base our fee on the amount of money we collect for you. If no money is collected, there is no charge.

Is it possible to apply for a family member?

Yes of course, and if the person with the disability does not have an income to qualify, then you can receive the money for the person with the disability, and help them out with the money received.

Disability Tax Credits (DTC)

Individuals eligible for DTC should have impairments in physical or mental functions that lasted or is expected to last for a continuous periods of at least 12 months.

Qualified practitioners are doctors, optometrists, audiologists, occupational therapist, physiotherapists, psychologists and speech-language pathologists.

It is important to note that we treat all of your private information with respect and the utmost privacy. If you’re under the age of 18, you can still claim disability tax credits.

The average time is about 16 weeks to six months to receive the disability tax credit, payments are made usually in three months installments. You don’t have to pay taxes on this money, it is non-taxable.

Please be aware that this is not a detailed list. There are many disabilities not listed here that may still qualify.
